Torrance Nike Missile Unit Tops in State

Instituting a monthly presentation of the 108th Artillery Group Operational Readiness Evaluation pennant, Col. Grant W. Mason, commanding officer of the 108th Group, awarded the pennant to Lt. Richard G. Wilde, commanding officer of the Torrance Nike missile site. The presentation to the Torrance site, Battery B, 4th Missile Battalion, 251st Artillery (National Guard), was made in a special formation here, marking the second time Battery B has won such an award since September. In ORE tests, given to verify the degree of readiness of Nike missilemen and equipment, each battery undergoes a simulated air attack. During the mock raid, observers check for deficiencies. Radar operators are observed in the operations of acquiring and tracking targets and switching to new targets. Checks are made on the crewmen's ability to place the missiles in the firing position. Missiles are checked for cleanliness and maintenance. Battery B was honored further this week by placing third in the California National Guard annual administrative and personnel evaluation. As first and second places were taken by ordnance units, the Torrance site stands as the top National Guard guided-missile unit in the state. The Torrance site is one of four National Guard sites under the control of the 108th Artillery Group, defending southern Los Angeles against air attack.
